[Qui, subject of an incidental phrase, refers to persons or things: l'homme qui veut vivre en paix; la maison qui m'appartient; les hommes qui craignent Dieu; lequel, laquelle, lesquels, lesquelles is never used in such a case. À qui, refers to persons, or things personified: l'homme à qui j'ai parlé; la vertu à qui je rends hommage. When not personified, things require not qui, but lequel: la chose à laquelle vous devez surtout faire attention; c'est le point sur lequel il faut réfléchir. Dont is preferable to de qui whether in the case of persons or things: l'homme dont (not de qui) vous parlez; la réputation dont (not de laquelle) vous jouissez. Qui takes the number of the pronoun which immediately precedes it: moi qui ai parlé; toi qui as parlé; vous qui avez parlé, etc. Si c'était moi qui eusse; si c'était vous qui eussiez; c'est moi qui le premier ai montré; c'est vous qui le premier avez montré. Qui must never be separated from the noun to which it refers; thus we must say: cet homme qui ne cherche qu'à tromper, a grand tort, and not: cet homme a grand tort qui, etc... The interposition of an adjective, or a preposition, is no violation of the rule: l'homme intrépide qui marche à l'ennemi; les amis de mon père qui nous suivaient. Qui agrees in number with the noun by which it is immediately preceded: vous êtes, grande reine, un génie tutélaire qui est venu (not qui êtes venue) consolider la paix. Vous parlez en homme qui entend (not qui entendez) la matière. Vous êtes le premier qui ait (not qui ayez) éclairci cette difficulté. The phrase: votre ami est un des hommes qui doit le moins compter sur moi, is no violation of the rule. Doit is in the singular, the sense being: de tous les hommes votre ami est celui qui doit le moins compter sur moi. In the phrase: votre ami est un des hommes qui manquèrent périr dans la sédition; manquèrent is in the plural, the sense being: votre ami est du nombre des hommes qui manquèrent périr, etc.]

[Subitement follows the verb.]

SUBITO, adv. Latin, suddenly, on a sudden. (Fam.)

SUBJECTION, s. f. (rhet.) subjection.

SUBJONCTIF, sûb-zonk-tlf, s. m. (gram.) subjunctive, the subjunctive mood.

[Subjonctif: the present tense of this mood may imply present or future time according to the nature of the subject: je ne crois pas qu'il parte, may be an answer to il part, and signify: I do not think he starts, or it may be an answer to il partira, and signify: I do not think he will start. Je ne croyais pas qu'il partît, may be an answer to il est parti, or il partira, the imperfect tense being thus alternatively a past or a future. Il a fallu que j'aie consulté, I must have consulted; je n'entreprendrai rien que je n'aie consulté, I will undertake nothing till I have (shall have) consulted; again a past and a future. The government of each verb being carefully noted all along, it would be superfluous to state here what particular verbs require the subjunctive. But as many of them govern the indicative affirmatively, and the subjunctive interrogatively, it may not be unnecessary to state under what circumstances the interrogation requires the subjunctive. Interrogative propositions require the subj., when the question involves any thing vague, doubtful, uncertain or that is considered as such by the speaker: croyez-vous qu'il veuille y consentir? Pensez-vous que ce soit lui? When no such doubt exists, when the truth of the proposition is indisputable, and the interrogation a mere form of speech, the indic. is used: croyez-vous que deux et deux font quatre? which is equivalent to: vous croyez, sans doute, que deux et deux font quatre? Croyez-vous que Dieu a créé le ciel et la terre! equivalent to: vous croyez, sans doute, que Dieu a créé le ciel et la terre? Were the same question to be asked with a shade of doubt, and in order to have that doubt cleared up, the subj. would be used: croyez-vous que Dieu ait créé le ciel et la terre? The negation, as it frequently implies doubt, also requires the subj.: je ne savais pas que vous eussiez étudié les mathématiques. Affirmation itself does not always exclude uncertainty, in which case affirmation also requires the subj.: je cherche un homme qui veuille m'obliger, qui veuille me prêter de l'argent, that is a man, any man who may be willing to oblige me, etc. If I say: je cherche un homme qui veut me prêter de l'argent, I intimate that I know such a person, and am in quest of him. From all which it may be concluded that the subjunctive frequently depends as much on the intention or feeling of the speaker, as upon any settled rules of grammar.]

SUPERLATI-F, VE, sû-pêr-lâ-tif, tîv, adj. (gram.) superlative.

[Superlatif. There are two kinds of superlatives, the one absolute, the other relative. In the superlative absolute expressed by le plus, le plus is invariable: cette scène est une de celles qui furent le plus applaudies. La lune n'est pas aussi éloignée de la terre que le soleil, lors même qu'elle en est le plus éloignée; in both phrases the degree is at its highest, though without reference or relation to any thing but the subject of the phrases. Whether we are to say: les opinions les plus or le plus généralement suivies, les mieux or le mieux établies; les sentiments les plus or le plus approuvés; les opérations les plus or le plus sagement combinées must depend altogether on the peculiar meaning we attach to the phrase. Thus in speaking of a woman in a case when she can only be compared to herself le plus is invariable: c'est quand son mari gronde qu'elle est le plus tranquille, it is when her husband storms, that she is at her coolest; c'est dans le tête-à-tête qu'elle est le plus amiable; when there is a reference to other women le plus is variable: dans une fête, dans un spectacle, elle est toujours la plus belle.]

[Tomber: mon enfant est tombé, implies that the child is stretched on the ground; mon enfant a tombé, intimates that he fell, but is now on his legs again. With être, therefore, tomber implies situation; with avoir, action. This distinction is but little observed. There are cases, however, when être cannot be employed with any degree of accuracy. When a thing has one name before it falls, and another after it has fallen, situation or state is out of the question: la pluie tombe, la pluie a tombé. In speaking of a period not yet elapsed être may be used: la pluie est tombée ce matin à verse; though it would be ridiculous to say: la pluie est tombée à verse, il y a six jours. The same observation is applicable to foudre and tonnerre: l'année dernière le tonnerre a tombé sur plusieurs édifices; le tonnerre est tombé ce matin, or a tombé ce matin dans la Seine. Tomber par terre, is said of the person or thing that touches the ground; tomber à terre, of the person or thing that falls from any elevation above the ground. The first may be said of a man walking in the street; the second of a slater falling from the roof of a house: un arbre tombe par terre; le fruit de l'arbre tombe à terre.]
